

Cognitive Functions

Cognitive functions are the technical term for “Modes of processing information and making decisions based on your Myers-Briggs type.” Each type has four (out of a possible eight) cognitive functions, which they use in a specific order. Identifying which functions you use – and in what order – is the most accurate way to type yourself or anyone else.

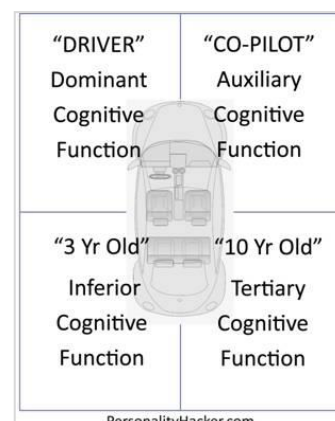

ESFP Functions ESFP Primary Processes

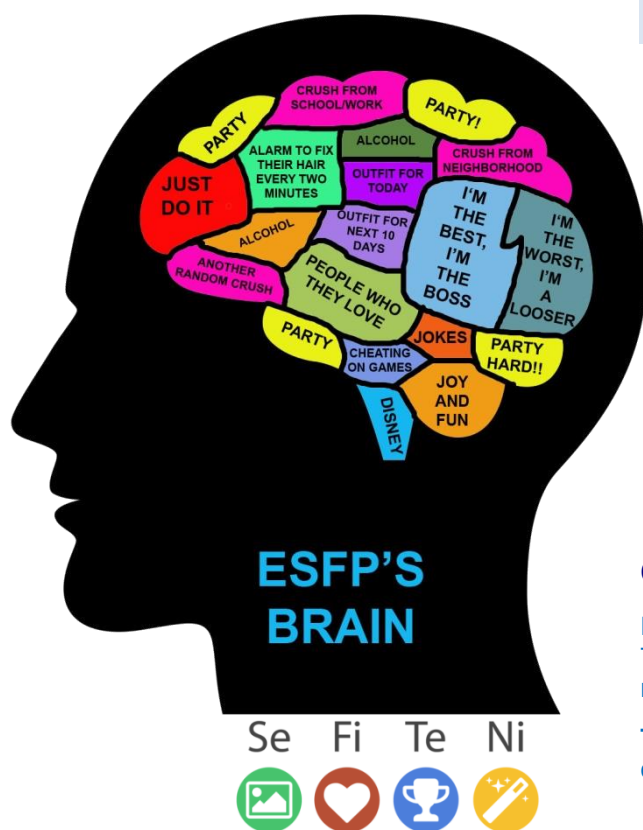

Role	Process	Snapshot
Leading “Driver”	Extroverted Sensing	Experiencing and acting in the immediate context.
Supportive “Co-Pilot”	Introverted Feeling	Valuing and considering importance, beliefs, and worth
Relief “10 year old”	Extroverted Thinking	Segmenting, organising for efficiency, and systematising
Aspirational “3 year old”	Introverted iNtuition	Foreseeing implications, transformations, and likely effects

The analogy of a car is a useful model when thinking about cognitive functions. The first function is the ‘driver’ of the personality type and is the function from which perspective of all of the other functions follow. It provides the direction and speed. The second function is the ‘co-pilot’, which navigates around or through any difficulties encountered. The inferior, or 3 year old, function attempts to distract both primary and secondary functions whereas the tertiary function, or ‘10 year old’, only distracts the current dominant function.

Understanding cognitive functions is imperative to understanding type. The four-letter dichotomies cannot possibly explain the complexity of our personalities – we are all thinkers, feelers, sensors and intuitives in various situations. The cognitive functions allow us to understand when we use each function and how it impacts our decision-making process.

The Cognitive Functions

Role	Process	Snapshot
Ne	Extroverted Intuition	How do concepts happen outside me?
Ni	Introverted Intuition	How do concepts happen within me?
Fe	Extroverted Feeling	How does this make others feel?
Fi	Introverted Feeling	Experiencing and acting in the immediate context.
Te	Extroverted Thinking	How does this logically affect things?
Ti	Introverted Thinking	How does this logically affect me?
Se	Extroverted Sensing	How is the environment outside me?
Si	Introverted Sensing	How is the environment inside me?

CONCLUSION

ESFP Entertainers are lively. They possess a great zest for life. They are adventurous, enjoy new experiences and like to build new memories. They are fun and lively companions.

Their greatest contribution is their ability to create positive experiences for others.

What is MBTI?

Myers-Briggs Type Indicator (MBTI) is a tool that helps people gain insights about themselves and how they interact with others—and improve how they communicate, learn, and work.

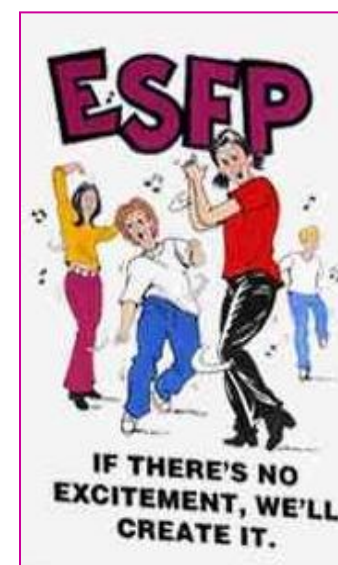

Often referred to as a ‘personality test’, MBTI actually has less to do with one’s personality and everything to do with how their brain works from receiving and processing external information to communication preferences. These preferences are split into four pairs – I/E, S/N, F/T and J/P. Though everyone is unique and will have some traits of all 8 letters, people will often be more inclined towards one letter in each pair. By determining your preference in each group, and putting these four letters together, you get your personality type code – for you, this is ESFP.

ESFP – The Entertainer

What does that mean?

Extroverted	Energised by time with others
Sensing	Pays attention to facts and details
Feeling	Prioritises people and emotions
Perceiving	Prefers freedom and flexibility

If anyone is to be found spontaneously breaking into song and dance, it is the ESFP personality type. ESFPs get caught up in the excitement of the moment, and want everyone else to feel that way, too. No other personality type is as generous with their time and energy as ESFPs when it comes to encouraging others, and no other personality type does it with such irresistible style. ESFPs are vivacious entertainers who charm and engage those around them. They are spontaneous, energetic, and fun-loving, and take pleasure in the things around them: food, clothes, nature, animals, and especially people.

Typically warm and talkative, with a contagious enthusiasm for life, ESFPs like to be in the middle of the action and the centre of attention. They have a playful, open sense of humour, and like to draw out other people and help them have a good time.

ESFPs live in the moment, enjoying what life has to offer. They are especially tuned into their senses and take pleasure in the sights, sounds, smells, and textures around them. ESFPs like to keep busy, filling their lives with hobbies, sports, activities, and friends. Because they'd rather live spontaneously than plan ahead, they can become overextended when there are too many exciting things to do. An ESFP hates nothing more than missing out on the fun.

Although they are characteristically fun-loving, ESFPs are also typically practical and down-to-earth. They are grounded in reality and are usually keenly aware of the facts and details in their environment, especially as they pertain to people. They are observant of others and their needs, and responsive in offering assistance. ESFPs enjoy helping other people, especially in practical, tangible ways.

Strengths

- Bold –Wanting to experience everything there is to experience, people with the ESFP personality type don't mind stepping out of their comfort zones when no one else is willing.
- Original –ESFP personalities love to experiment with new styles, and constantly find new ways to stick out in the crowd.
- Aesthetics and Showmanship – Not stopping at mere outfits, ESFPs inject artistic creativity into their words and actions, too.
- Practical – To ESFPs, the world is meant to be felt and experienced. Truth is stranger than fiction, and ESFPs prefer to see and do than to wax philosophical about "what-ifs".
- Observant –ESFPs are naturals when it comes to noticing real, tangible things and changes.
- Excellent People Skills –ESFPs love to pay attention to people. They are talkative, witty, and almost never run out of things to discuss.

Weaknesses

- Sensitive – ESFPs are strongly emotional and very vulnerable to criticism – they can feel like they've been backed into a corner, sometimes reacting badly.
- Conflict-Averse – ESFPs sometimes ignore and avoid conflict entirely. They tend to say and do what's needed to get out of such situations, then move on to something more fun.
- Easily Bored – Without constant excitement, ESFPs find ways to create it themselves.
- Poor Long-Term Planners – ESFPs rarely make detailed plans for the future. To them, things come as they come, and they rarely bother with taking the time to lay out steps and consequences, with the belief that they could change at any moment – even with things that can be planned.
- Unfocused – Anything that requires long-term dedication and focus is a particular challenge for ESFPs. In academics, dense, unchanging subjects like Classic Literature are much more difficult than more dynamic, relatable subjects like psychology.

ESFPs are often the life of the party, entertaining and engaging others with humor and enthusiasm. They notice whether other people are having fun, and do their best to create a good time for all. Typically at home in their physical environment, ESFPs may take the lead in getting everyone involved in some active diversion. ESFPs are generally friendly and likable, but can be hard to get close to; although they tend to be very open, they are reluctant to be serious or to talk about anything negative.

ESFPs are tuned into their senses, and often gravitate towards pleasing colors and textures in their environments. They often carefully choose fabrics and decorations with which to surround themselves. This attention also often translates into their appearance; ESFPs are often dressed in sensuous fabrics or bright, dazzling colors. They are often up on the latest trends, and like to excite the people around them with new environments and experiences.

Bored, adj.

Extrovert's Definition:
Not frantically busy.

Introvert's Definition:
Stuck making small talk and unable to escape politely.

ESFPs are hard workers who like to get things done. They work well in social and friendly environments. They dislike confining rules and prefer to work with freedom and flexibility. They strive to do their best and expect the same from others. They are fun to work with and are able to get along with others.

As subordinates: ESFPs thrive on change and new ideas, and loathe repetitive and strictly defined tasks. ESFP personalities' managers find willing and able experimenters who can brainstorm, quickly grasp new methods, and actually put those methods to practical use – so long as ESFPs have a little leeway apply their own creative style.

As colleagues: If anyone can make friends with their colleagues and keep tension at bay within their team, it's ESFPs. A fun atmosphere is important, and ESFPs use their strong observational and social skills to bring everyone together.

As managers: ESFPs do everything they can to pump energy and fun into the day-to-day work that needs to be done. They enjoy being the centre of attention, and even more so to feel like they're needed and appreciated. Jumping into the thick of the work and applying themselves to anything they'd ask their subordinates to do is something ESFPs consider part of the job. Authority and social status are secondary to feeling like they're an important part of a team that gets the job done.

ESFPs love big parties and gatherings and are quick to join any group or activity that sounds like fun.

For ESFPs, relationships aren't about slowly building foundations for the future, or planning out a life – they are bubbling, unpredictable things to be enjoyed for as long as there's enjoyment to be had.

ESFPs are enthusiastic, light-hearted communicators. They often love just interacting with people, with no particular goal in mind, and tend to keep conversations fun and full of laughter. ESFPs are good problem-solvers when it comes to practical and interpersonal issues, but they tend to avoid negativity.

In relationships, ESFPs are generous, friendly, sympathetic, and affectionate. They are eager to please their partners and motivated to create a fun, harmonious, and active home. They often enjoy family life tremendously and typically prioritise socialising with loved ones above all else.

Intriguing differences:

ISTP, ISFJ, ENFP, ENFJ

INTP, INTJ, INFJ and ENTJ personalities can clash and conflict with the ESFP, but may also offer the best opportunities for growth. With fundamentally different values and motivations, their strengths are the ESFP's weaknesses, and if they are able to develop a relationship, they can learn a tremendous amount from each other.

ESFPs will become burnt out and overwhelmed if:

- they feel like their loved ones are neglecting them, or aren't considerate enough of their needs.
- they are constantly forced to take care of the household tasks- without being able to take a break for themselves.

ESFPs are extremely fun and entertaining people-who enjoy living life to the fullest. They are passionate individuals, often seen making others laugh.

ESFPs need to be able to enjoy life, and if they are forced to perform monotonous tasks it will be too much for them after a while. ESFPs who are suffering from burn out, simply need to spend time with their loved ones. They need to feel like they are being appreciated and loved by those closest to them.

Change

ESFPs often enjoy the idea of change, and might prefer it over staying too stagnant. They might become bored easily if they are stuck in one place for too long. ESFP wants life to be a fun and positive experience, often wanting to see the bright side of things. As long as they are able to keep the people they love in their lives, the ESFP is very willing to accept change. They enjoy going with the flow, making life a constantly new and enriching experience.
