

Recognising the ISFJ

ISFJs are characteristically humble and unassuming, and rarely call attention to themselves. They can often be found offering assistance to others in a modest, understated way. They are loyal and hardworking, and often commit themselves to tasks and projects with the aim of being helpful to their families, friends, and communities. They are typically involved in social groups, but do not want the spotlight: they are more likely to be found behind the scenes, working diligently to fulfil their role.

ISFJs are oriented to relationships, but can be reserved with new people. They rarely disclose personal information quickly. They tend to be focused and aware of their surroundings, and relate details from their own personal experience. They often converse in terms of what has happened to them and what they have seen first-hand. They are compassionate listeners, and typically remember details about people. They often enjoy hearing the facts about others in the process of making a connection.

Career

ISFJs are dependable and trustworthy. They feel a great sense of responsibility for the job assigned to them. They work well when they know what is expected of them. They often enjoy working alone and do best without distractions. ISFJs have a hard time stopping until the job is done. They are committed to treating others with respect.

As subordinates: ISFJs exemplify the strength of humble dedication. Relied on and respected for their patience and commitment, ISFJ personalities really only seek one reward for their work: the satisfaction of knowing that whoever they helped feels heartfelt thanks. On the other hand, this humbleness can hold them back, which makes it too easy for them to be overlooked when opportunities come along.

As colleagues: ISFJs seek a frictionless environment, a spirit of friends helping friends to get the job done, enjoying close-knit and supportive. ISFJs are natural networkers, but they use this skill to keep things running smoothly, not as a tool for professional advancement.

As managers: Management isn't necessarily at the top of ISFJs' list of goals, but is a natural progression as their hard work and good people skills. ISFJs are warm, approachable and great listeners. Having no real desire to issue authoritarian dictates from some high tower, ISFJ personalities prefer to work alongside their subordinates, organising people and minimising conflict.

ISFJ MOTTO

Relationships

ISFJs define love in terms of caring and support. They are utterly committed and dedicated in their relationships. They are often trustworthy and can be counted upon through thick and thin. They cherish deep connections and seek lifelong friendships. They sometimes have a hard time standing up for themselves. ISFJs have a great sense of humour and love to laugh.

People with the ISFJ personality type are shy and a little protective of themselves, but they also need to be able to connect on a deeper emotional level. ISFJ friends are typically made through comfortable and consistent contact, as in class or in the workplace where they have the time to get to know each other little by little.

Relationships built on established familiarity are a warm prospect for ISFJs – they take dating seriously and only enter into relationships that have a real chance of lasting a lifetime.

Intriguing differences:

ISFP, ESTJ, ESFP, ENFJ

ISTP, INFP, ESTP and ENFP personalities can clash and conflict with the ISFJ, but may also offer the best opportunities for growth. With fundamentally different values and motivations, their strengths are the ISFJ's weaknesses, and if they are able to develop a relationship, they can learn a tremendous amount from each other.

Burnout

ISFJs will become burnt out and overwhelmed if:

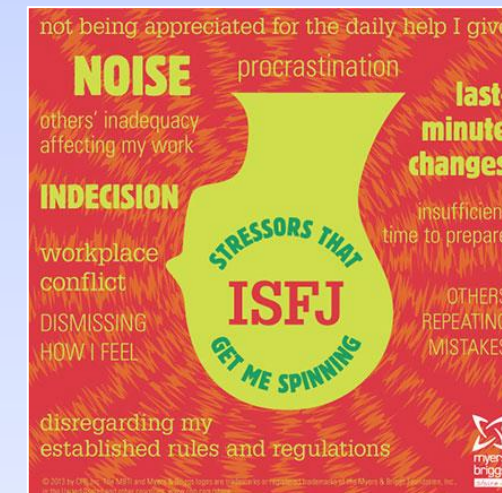

- they are forced to be social for prolonged periods of time
- they neglect their own needs - this can become very harmful for the ISFJs mental health

ISFJs are naturally focused on the needs of their loved ones. They prefer following a schedule and might become frustrated if this schedule is disrupted.

When the ISFJ is suffering from burn out, they might find themselves incapable of tending to the normal daily tasks that usually come so easy. The ISFJ won't be as focused on taking care of their loved ones, since they are far too exhausted to do so. What the ISFJ needs is to focus on their schedule, and stop allow others to force them to try new things or explore new ideas. The ISFJ needs to take time for themselves, in order to get back to health state of mind.

ISFJ Stressors

Change

ISFJs enjoy being able to keep harmony and order in their environments. Because of this they often become uneasy with any kind of change. They enjoy when things stay the same, and want to have a clear schedule in their lives. Chaos is one of the worst things for an ISFJ, this will make them extremely distressed. They may be okay if the change is clearly a good one, but still will be uneasy until they see for sure. They enjoy being able to navigate their environment, and are often thrown off by the presence of change. The ISFJs main goal is to create harmony and happiness for their loved ones, making changing a scary thing for them.
